

NANCY WYNNE HAS A BUSY TIME ATTENDING VARIOUS DIVERSIONS

Easy-Large Wedding One of the Prettiest This Year. Last Meeting of Mrs. Smith's Supper Club Saturday Night

WITHOUT doubt Henriette Large Easy was a dream of a bride. I never saw her lovelier. She is such a dainty, exquisite type it seems to me as if she had stepped out of another period into this century. She is like a Greek painting. Well, at the wedding she wore some of the old family lace in a succession of frouces, and satin was draped from the shoulders to form the long train which fell over the short skirt. She has such a fair skin with her dark hair and eyes that the rich old lace was wonderfully becoming. Of course the entire Large family turned out, and the Large and Meade connection by no means belie the first name.

Maile, of course, had not so many relatives, as the family is small and York Stevenson is away in France, you know, and Mrs. York was also away, but of course his parents were there, and Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Stevenson and Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Thurston, Mason and Dr. Clement Biddle; the last named, by the way, is to be surgeon of the Preparedness Camp.

Mary Reakert Large, and Margarette Large Harrison were both frocked in gray, which brought out their vivid personality, and Mary Large Fox was perfectly lovely, also. Meade gave Henriette in marriage; he is the eldest brother, and very handsome. But I really think the children were the loveliest little things I have ever seen at any wedding. Little Sarah Large and Mary Harrison were flower girls, and that little lamb of a Jack Fox was a page; then, all the other children went to the wedding and reception, too, the Larges, the Harrisons and the Foxes. Truly the beauty in the family has been bequeathed to the younger generation.

On Saturday evening Mrs. J. Hutchison Scott gave an extra Supper Club party, to which she invited the members of both series, and surely the success of her club was proved by the eagerness with which the members flocked to the ballroom of the Bellevue-Stratford, where a double row of tables extended around the entire room; in fact, in some instances they were ranged three rows deep, and in many cases seated as many as 20 and 30 guests. Altogether, I should say, there must have been more than five hundred persons there. Betty Scott was, oh, so pretty in a dear little gown of white lace and pale gray and with an exquisite bouquet of flowers from her fiance, who was looking so glad that others knew about the engagement now, and he could let his face express his happiness.

The world and his wife were there, I should say; at any rate, Billy Drayton and his wife were, and Billy Warden and his and the Pere Wilmers and Howard Woods. I could not begin to say all, but I saw Mr. and Mrs. Randolph Justice, Mr. and Mrs. Gardner Cassatt, Mr. and Mrs. Sydney E. Hutchinson, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Bell, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Roddy Page, Mr. and Mrs. Hecksher Wetherill, Mr. and Mrs. James Potter, Jack Potter, Mr. and Mrs. E. Rittenhouse Miller, Cecile Howell, Eleanor Verner, Peggy Perot, Dr. and Mrs. Warren Walker, Mr. and Mrs. Hal Paton, Mr. and Mrs. George Rosen-garten, Mrs. Ralph Derr (Phoebe Howell, who was), Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Earle White, Mr. and Mrs. Wilson McCredy, Mr. and Mrs. Eli K. Price, Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Wurtz, Miss Mary Wurtz, Mr. and Mrs. James M. Reed, Frances Sullivan, Bertha Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Potter, Jr., Agnes Spencer, Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Schlichter, Mr. and Mrs. John Shipley Dixon, Sarah Penrose, Sarah Nelson, Josephine Cooke, Clarence Fisher, Agnes Brockie, Beale Wister, Isabel Page, Ned Davis, Dick Bullitt, Gertrude P. K. Panooset, Sophia Norris, Fielding Wilcox, Jas Smith and hosts of others.

Balloons and brightly colored feathers attached to burrs were thrown down on the dancers from the boxes; the burrs stuck of course and the brilliant reds and blues and greens added to the gaiety of nations, attached as they were to heads and shoulders of those on the floor.

I wish you could have seen the Walter Lippincott front steps at 21st and Walnut streets yesterday morning about 3 p. m. Some one going up Walnut or 21st, I know not, and certainly he did not know, had evidently conceived the idea that Walnut street was not wide enough for him and his new car and so decided to walk up the Lippincott's front wall. He did it, too, of that there can be no doubt, though why he left the steps still there is something I should like explained, for the entire stone railing of the house towards 21st street was ripped right off, half of the middle rail was gone and the big stone block which held the railing at the Stricker Coles' was thrown out on the pavement. At first I wondered if a Zeppelin had dropped a bomb and then a couple of iron nuts and a piece of splintered wood told the tale. I have no idea who did it, but the curves and zigzags which were outlined by fresh tire marks showed no certain approach. I only hope no one was hurt. There were no signs of gore in the morning light of 3, so we will hope for the best.

NANCY WYNNE.
